Lindley-Murray School Restoration

A Few Feet Into The Past

Two years ago an ambitious group of students, advised by Mr. Thomas Donmoyer, started working on a project for our nation's 200th birthday, the Lindley Murray Schoolhouse.

The first order of business was to secure a lease from the state of Pennsylvania for the property. This procedure became long and drawn out but after a year of pressure and determination, the students' goal became a reality.

Then the real work began. The students worked on a volunteer basis, and all funds and supplies were received from donations. Using the available resources, the students practically rebuilt the entire building.

As the work continues, plans are being made concerning what will be done with the property once restoration is complete. The best suggestion so far seems to be to use the building as a practical learning area for Intermediate Unit 13, where all 5th grade classes may come to actually experience history instead of just reading about it. The classes at the school would be taught by the students who helped to rebuild it, and would consist of presentations, and tape recordings of people who actually went to school there or in a similar building.

The school house will eventually be leased to the Lebanon County Historical Preservation Trust and will be open to the general public.

Watch out readers! You are about to behold one of the eight wonders of the world--The Student's Creative Corner! (you thought there were only seven didn't you?) On the next few pages your eyes will feast on artwork, poems and stories such as you have never seen! And the most wonderful part of this is that they are all works of Northern Lebanon students.

Creative students at NL rarely have a chance to exhibit their art-work and display the products of their written creativity, so we have devoted this section of the 1976 ARCHIVE to them.

One To Remember

Hunting is a sport which quiet's one's nerves. How pleasent it is to get up at 5:30 in morning, baggy eyed, grogy and miserable and to your surprise you find out it's raining.

You have breakfast finally after coaxing yourself through the art of getting on all gear. It's like a jig-zaw puzzle or a new item that you buy without instruction for assembly of parts. You're finally finished and are now driving into mountain, stumble up the mountain, find a good spot. At the same time the pouring down rain, dripping down your back, soaks you from head to toe.

Finally after restless hours of waiting, a twelve point buck walks up to you. You try shooting at the deer, but you forgot the bullets at home, so as frustrated as you are, you hit the deer over the head, crack the stock on your brand new gun and get trampled into the mud by the angered deer.

So, you walk down the mountain, get into the car, throw your gun on the back seat, but as you're ready to leave, you find out you're stuck in the mud. So after an hour and a half of trying to get out of the mud, the car goes out of control, rams a tree, and you're stuck all over again. A half an hour, you finally get off the mountain, and start looking for a garage to fix the dent in the fender that's causing the wheel to rub. After half an hour, a little joint on the steering falls out and you wreck, so you walk letting the car sit there.

So you go home, take a shower and go to bed thinking: what a beautiful day!

Cloven tracks in the snow
A brown deer ran
Blood on the snow
Not fast enough
Trees that sheltered him when Once a fawn
With naked limbs
Now stare down
At the lifeless head
And glazing eyes
A soon to be mounted
Nimrod's prize
No longer he runs
A carefree buck
Finally ran out of luck
And met with the message
Of the hunter's gun.

The Adventure of the Missing Bullet
By J.E. Payne (patterned after the style of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle)

"Wits, Watson, gather your wits, and surely you will see the answer to this problem."

This problem was a problem of a man being shot at close quarters.

Simple enough, he did assuredly have the bullet wound. What the problem confronting us today was, though, there were no powder burns, nor was there any bullet. The signs of the bullet entering the body were clear enough, but it did not exit. I did not see any answer to the problem, and I made no qualms in informing Mr. Sherlock Holmes I did not.

"Then we shall gather out possibles, and by process of elimination, cast off the impossibles.

"Sir Charles Hainsworth, a rising young member of Parilment, was most definitly shot. That much is clear. But where then is the wretched bullet?"

"Was it extracted by the murderer?" Possibly, but then he would have to have stepped in the large pool of blood which was surrounding the body. Then at least we would have footsteps leading from the body. Therefore this possibility may be disposed of.

"Did the bullet leave the body through the process of momentum? Again, Watson, most possible, if not for the fact that there are no signs of it exiting from the body nor is there a bullet hole in any of the walls of Sir Charles modest Bachelor flat. This possibility may also be eliminated. "Holmes," I said, "I tire of these mind-games. Inevitably, everytime a puzzle is presented to us, you almost immediatly know the answer. Yet, you continue to bufuddle me, so that I admit my intellect is nowhere near your genius. I shall admit it Holmes. I would gladly shout it from the roofs of London, if you would just make the puzzle a bit more clear, so that one so slow as I might have a chance to make a deduction leading hopefully to the same solution you have already discovered."

"At this my friend's face grew slack, as he did indeed enjoy his games. Even in the pale illumination of our gas-light, intensified to a small extent by the street-lanterns outside the window, I was almost positive I could see a look of amazement in his face.

"Alright, Watson," said he, turning toward the window and mocking interest in the passing carriages on Baker Street, "I shall do just that. On my desk you shall find a letter written to me by the manager of the Winter Games in nearby Sussex. Read it carefully, Dear Watson. Don't miss a single word; for the answer is there, but you can't expect it to leap out at you as a toad would.

I moved to his desk and picked up the letter delivered by post just this morning.
It read:

Dear Mr. Holmes,

Following your interesting career in London, we are offering you this invitation. As you are no doubt aware, every year we ask some local person of high esteem to act as our Grand Marshall for the Winter Games. This year the honor falls upon you.

Should you accept, some of your duties would be: judging of the ice sculptures, a very lovely display; preparing a menu for the opening-night banquet (you would be allowed to present any delicacy you wish); and riding in a private hansome at the head of the Opening Day Parade.

I then put the letter down and turned toward the Detective.

"I'm sorry, Holmes, but I just don't..."

"Watson, you amaze me with your act of ignorance. Surely you must have deduced...Come here, Watson. Quickly!"

I sprinted to the window, and gazed at the spot his bony finger was directed to.

"Those children, Watson. What are they sliding and playing on?"

"Ice, Holmes. But ice is not so rare in an English winter. It forms anywhere there is water. If this is some type of clue, I am very much afraid that its meaning is lost to me."

"Very well, Watson. Get your service revolver and a pitcher of water and follow me. Bundle up Watson. We're going out.

Bundle up was right. Snow had just fallen earlier this morning, and the temperature was still considerably below freezing. Nevertheless, ten minutes later we were standing on the snowcovered sidewalk in front of 221B Baker Street.

"Now Watson, before I begin, let us go back 24 hours, and re-tell the story of the murder again."

"Sir Charles Hainsworth and his butler were enjoying a peaceful evening at home. After drawing Sir Charles' bath, the Butler left to meet a friend of his at a pub. When the Butler returned, Sir Charles was dead. The Butler claims he was only gone for a maximum of one hour.

"Your revolver, Watson. Is she loaded? Good, then."

Rambling. . . . . .

O say can you let me out of town and country tires me out of time, rosemary, parsley and sagebrush your teeth for two and two for tee shirt tail's out of lucky strike me dead
to the world war one more time for bed of roses are red violets are blueberries, strawberries and pretty maids all in a row row your boat gently up a creek, merrily, merrily, Mary-go-round in circles, triangles and Hollywood square dancing, prancing and Donner and Blitzen, Comet ye faithful by the dawn's early light my fire, sun, wind and don't rain on my parade. . . . . .

Lara Rohrer

Someone once asked me,
"What do you get from pouring out your heart to a piece of paper?"

My friend,
This paper will never
desert me,
As you have.
This paper will never
critisize me,
Unless I deserve it.
This paper permits me to release all my pain for awhile.
I must hold it back in your presence.
My friend,
This paper is something I can give myself,
And not feel obligated to repay.
This paper is my only real freedom of thought.

BUZZ JOB

Hair is falling about me as
My locks depart my head,
Terror riddles my body and
My soul is filled with dread.
My heart is black with hatred
For the man of red and
white,
Who doesn't seem to give a
damn,
About my hopeless plight.

You see I'm sure my life
will fold
Without my longer hair,
And all whom I hold dear
to me
Will laugh, and point and stare.
Like Samson, all my strength will sap
Virility down the drain;
And all the girls will shy
away,
Or look with great distain.

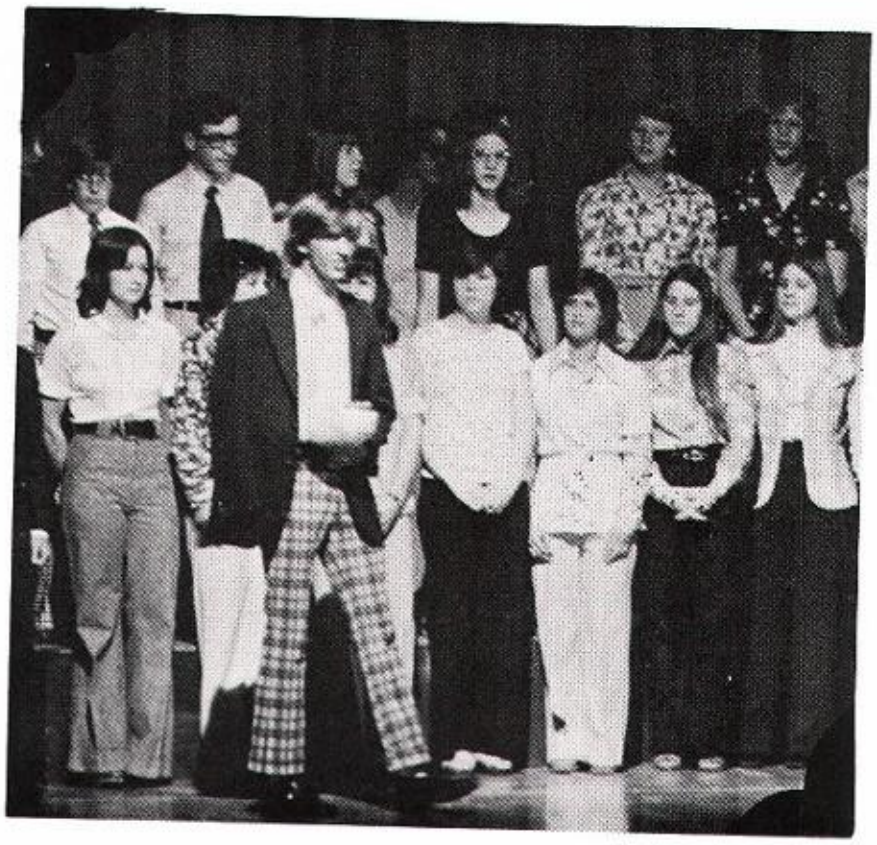
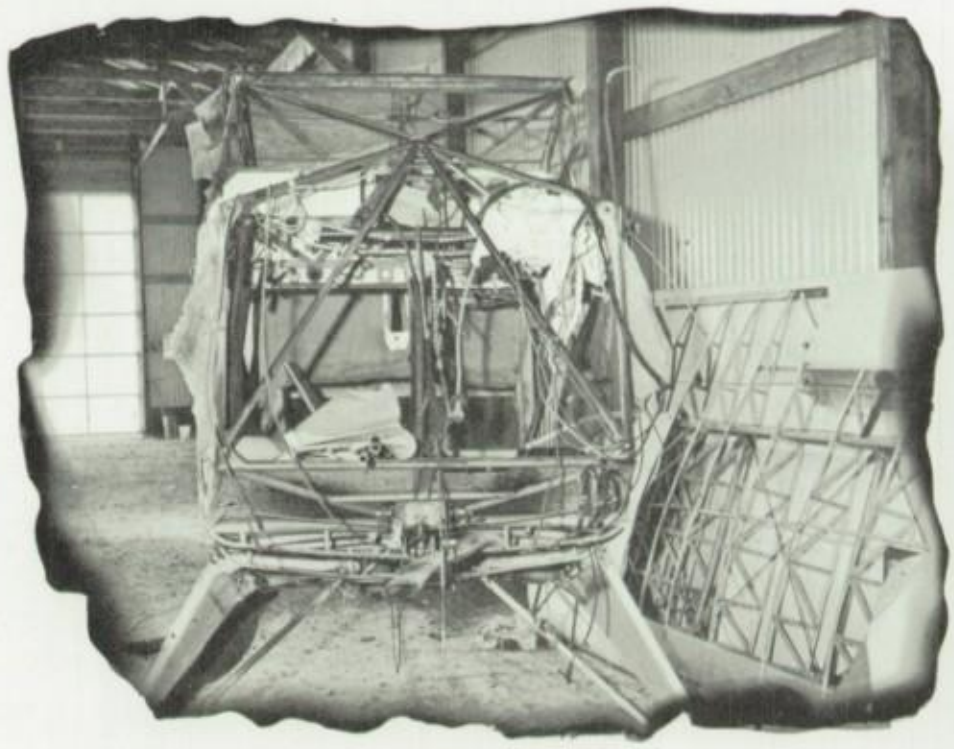
CRAIG BUTT AS BUD FRUMP



Miscellaneous And Junk

From Feet To Wings



AIRPLANE PROJECT

It all started last year when a few junior students in Mr. Krumbine's electronics class were discussing what they thought their senior year would be like. Most complained of endless study halls and nothing to do. They wanted something challenging, something different to occupy their spare time. Mr. Krumbine is very much into flying and airplanes and between him and the boys they concocted the idea of buying and rebuilding their own plane and possibly flying it. The airplane that was finally chosen was a Piper Tri-Pacer PA-22-135 which needed repair.

After the school board O.K.'d it, the project got under way. The objective was for the class to restore the plane to flying condition, take flying lessons, a pilots test, then fly the plane themselves. The class learned about aerodynamics, what the different parts were called and how they were used to control the plane.

The seniors involved are: Greg Eckenroth, Jay Beam, Jeff Bohn, Greg Walborn, Mike Peters, Mark Albright, Steve Daubert, Mark Yordy, Jim Carnathan and two girls--Lara Rohrer and Karen Enders. Mr. Krumbine and Mr. Hebel are their supervisors. The group is currently working on recovering the wings, flaps and tail parts. The plane is expected to be done by spring.

Muddy Footprints In The Science Hall.

A new addition to our school this year is the Outdoor Educational Area. It consists of a pond and a meadow stream which are located on approximately seven acres of land. It is located west of the school next to the girl's softball field. The pond is small and will be eventually stocked with fish. There are plans for the planting of trees and shrubs in the spring, but some of the areas will be left to grow wild to encourage wildlife and birds to nest there. Nature trails will also be developed. Students and teachers are invited to help plan the area. Other plans for the future include the building of a shelter for outdoor classes. The Outdoor Educational Area is not restricted to just science teachers, but may be used by any teachers in the high school.

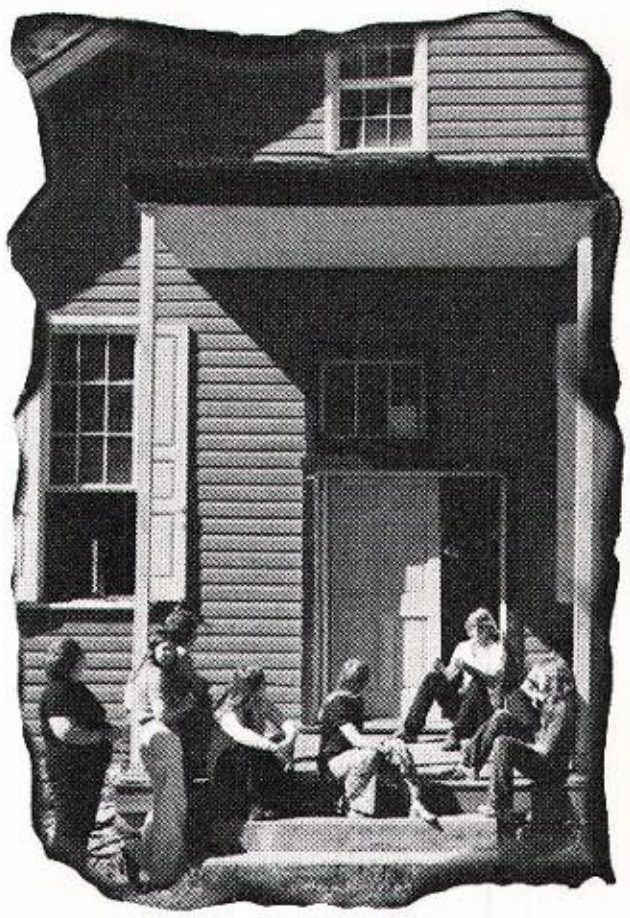
A Few Feet Into The Past



Two years ago an ambitious group of students, advised by Mr. Thomas Donmoyer, started working on a project for our nation's 200th birthday, the Lindley Murray Schoolhouse.

The first order of business was to secure a lease from the state of Pennsylvania for the property. This procedure became long and drawn out but after a year of pressure and determination, the students' goal became a reality.

Then the real work began. The students worked on a volunteer basis, and all funds and supplies were received from donations. Using the available resources, the students practically rebuilt the entire building.

As the work continues, plans are being made concerning what will be done with the property once restoration is complete. The best suggestion so far seems to be to use the building as a practical learning area for Intermediate Unit 13, where all 5th grade classes may come to actually experience history instead of just reading about it. The classes at the school would be taught by the students who helped to rebuild it, and would consist of presentations, and tape recordings of people who actually went to school there or in a similar building.

The school house will eventually be leased to the Lebanon County Historical Preservation Trust and will be open to the general public.

Watch out readers! You are about to behold one of the eight wonders of the world--The Student's Creative Corner! (you thought there were only seven didn't you?) On the next few pages your eyes will feast on artwork, poems and stories such as you have never seen! And the most wonderful part of this is that they are all works of Northern Lebanon students.

Creative students at NL rarely have a chance to exhibit their art-work and display the products of their written creativity, so we have devoted this section of the 1976 ARCHIVE to them.

Hunting is a sport which quiet's one's nerves. How pleasent it is to get up at 5:30 in morning, baggy eyed, grogy and miserable and to your surprise you find out it's raining.

You have breakfast finally after coaxing yourself through the art of getting on all gear. It's like a jig-zaw puzzle or a new item that you buy without instruction for assembly of parts. You're finally finished and are now driving into mountain, stumble up the mountain, find a good spot. At the same time the pouring down rain, dripping down your back, soaks you from head to toe.

Finally after restless hours of waiting, a twelve point buck walks up to you. You try shooting at the deer, but you forgot the bullets at home, so as frustrated as you are, you hit the deer over the head, crack the stock on your brand new gun and get trampled into the mud by the angered deer.

So, you walk down the mountain, get into the car, throw your gun on the back seat, but as you're ready to leave, you find out you're stuck in the mud. So after an hour and a half of trying to get out of the mud, the car goes out of control, rams a tree, and you're stuck all over again. A half an hour, you finally get off the mountain, and start looking for a garage to fix the dent in the fender that's causing the wheel to rub. After half an hour, a little joint on the steering falls out and you wreck, so you walk letting the car sit there.

So you go home, take a shower and go to bed thinking: what a beautiful day!

The Adventure of the Missing Bullet

By J.E. Payne (patterned after the style of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle)

"Wits, Watson, gather your wits, and surely you will see the answer to this problem."

This problem was a problem of a man being shot at close quarters.

Simple enough, he did assuredly have the bullet wound. What the problem confronting us today was, though, there were no powder burns, nor was there any bullet. The signs of the bullet entering the body were clear enough, but it did not exit. I did not see any answer to the problem, and I made no qualms in informing Mr. Sherlock Holmes I did not.

"Then we shall gather out possibles, and by process of elimination, cast off the impossibles.

"Sir Charles Hainsworth, a rising young member of Parilment, was most definitly shot. That much is clear. But where then is the wretched bullet?"

"Was it extracted by the murderer?" Possibly, but then he would have to have stepped in the large pool of blood which was surrounding the body. Then at least we would have footsteps leading from the body. Therefore this possibility may be disposed of.

"Did the bullet leave the body through the process of momentum? Again, Watson, most possible, if not for the fact that there are no signs of it exiting from the body nor is there a bullet hole in any of the walls of Sir Charles modest Bachelor flat. This possibility may also be eliminated. "Holmes," I said, "I tire of these mind-games. Inevitably, every-time a puzzle is presented to us, you almost immediatly know the answer. Yet, you continue to bufuddle me, so that I admit my intellect is nowhere near your genius. I shall admit it Holmes. I would gladly shout it from the roofs of London, if you would just make the puzzle a bit more clear, so that one so slow as I might have a chance to make a deduction leading hopefully to the same solution you have already discovered."

"At this my friend's face grew slack, as he did indeed enjoy his games. Even in the pale illumination of our gas-light, intensified to a small extent by the street-lanterns outside the window, I was almost positive I could see a look of amazement in his face.

"Alright, Watson," said he, turning toward the window and mocking interest in the passing carriages on Baker Street, "I shall do just that. On my desk you shall find a letter written to me by the manager of the Winter Games in nearby Sussex. Read it carefully, Dear Watson. Don't miss a single word; for the answer is there, but you can't expect it to leap out at you as a toad would.

I moved to his desk and picked up the letter delivered by post just this morning.
It read:

Dear Mr. Holmes,

Following your interesting career in London, we are offering you this invitation. As you are no doubt aware, every year we ask some local person of high esteem to act as our Grand Marshall for the Winter Games. This year the honor falls upon you.

Should you accept, some of your duties would be: judging of the ice sculptures, a very lovely display; preparing a menu for the opening-night banquet (you would be allowed to present any delicacy you wish); and riding in a private hansome at the head of the Opening Day Parade.

I then put the letter down and turned toward the Detective.

"I'm sorry, Holmes, but I just don't..."

"Watson, you amaze me with your act of ignorance. Surely you must have deduced...Come here, Watson. Quickly!"

I sprinted to the window, and gazed at the spot his bony finger was directed to.

"Those children, Watson. What are they sliding and playing on?"

"Ice, Holmes. But ice is not so rare in an English winter. It forms anywhere there is water. If this is some type of clue, I am very much afraid that its meaning is lost to me."

"Very well, Watson. Get your service revolver and a pitcher of water and follow me. Bundle up Watson. We're going out.

Bundle up was right. Snow had just fallen earlier this morning, and the temperature was still considerably below freezing. Nevertheless, ten minutes later we were standing on the snowcovered sidewalk in front of 221B Baker Street.

"Now Watson, before I begin, let us go back 24 hours, and re-tell the story of the murder again."

"Sir Charles Hainsworth and his butler were enjoying a peaceful evening at home. After drawing Sir Charles' bath, the Butler left to meet a friend of his at a pub. When the Butler returned, Sir Charles was dead. The Butler claims he was only gone for a maximum of one hour.

"Your revolver, Watson. Is she loaded? Good, then."

BUZZ JOB

Hair is falling about me as
My locks depart my head,
Terror riddles my body and
My soul is filled with dread.
My heart is black with
hatred
For the man of red and
white,
Who doesn't seem to give a
damn,
About my hopeless plight.

You see I'm sure my life
will fold
Without my longer hair,
And all whom I hold dear
to me
Will laugh, and point and
stare.
Like Samson, all my
strength will sap
Virility down the drain;
And all the girls will shy
away,
Or look with great distain.

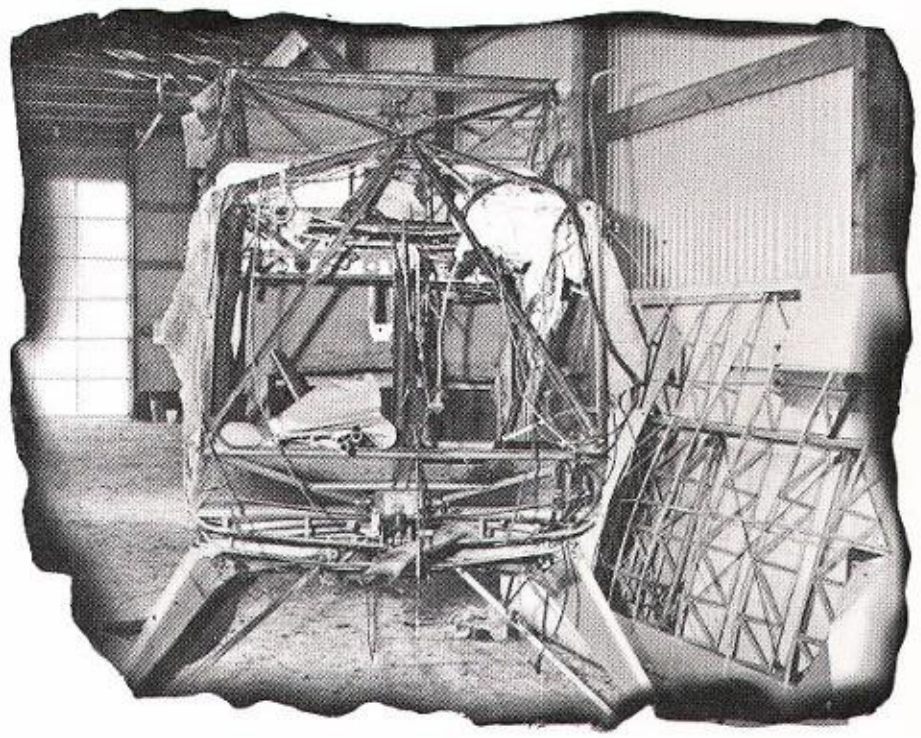
From Feet To Wings



AIRPLANE PROJECT

It all started last year when a few junior students in Mr. Krumbine's electronics class were discussing what they thought their senior year would be like. Most complained of endless study halls and nothing to do. They wanted something challenging, something different to occupy their spare time. Mr. Krumbine is very much into flying and airplanes and between him and the boys they concocted the idea of buying and rebuilding their own plane and possibly flying it. The airplane that was finally chosen was a Piper Tri-Pacer PA-22-135 which needed repair.

After the school board O.K.'d it, the project got under way. The objective was for the class to restore the plane to flying condition, take flying lessons, a pilots test, then fly the plane themselves. The class learned about aerodynamics, what the different parts were called and how they were used to control the plane.

The seniors involved are: Greg Eckenroth, Jay Beam, Jeff Bohn, Greg Walborn, Mike Peters, Mark Albright, Steve Daubert, Mark Yordy, Jim Carnathan and two girls--Lara Rohrer and Karen Enders. Mr. Krumbine and Mr. Hebel are their supervisors. The group is currently working on recovering the wings, flaps and tail parts. The plane is expected to be done by spring.

Muddy Footprints In The Science Hall.

A new addition to our school this year is the Outdoor Educational Area. It consists of a pond and a meadow stream which are located on approximately seven acres of land. It is located west of the school next to the girl's softball field. The pond is small and will be eventually stocked with fish. There are plans for the planting of trees and shrubs in the spring, but some of the areas will be left to grow wild to encourage wildlife and birds to nest there. Nature trails will also be developed. Students and teachers are invited to help plan the area. Other plans for the future include the building of a shelter for outdoor classes. The Outdoor Educational Area is not restricted to just science teachers, but may be used by any teachers in the high school.

In the third quarter of the Varsity Basketball game against Lebanon Catholic, Cliff Batz scored his 1,000 point, the first Viking ever to do so.

Not only did Batz break the 1,000 mark, he edged Norlebco to a win with a score of 48-45, of which 38 points were made by him.

The ARCHIVE staff would like to offer its warmest and most heartfelt thanks to the most constant and devoted "friend" a yearbook staff could have, elpie. elpie has done more for this 1976 ARCHIVE, its staff, this school, the community, Lebanon County, Pennsylvania, and this great nation of ours, the U.S. of A, than words could begin to convey, therefore we won't use words. No emotion-packed phraseology could possibly reflect the profound impact which has been rendered the ARCHIVE staff this year from our close and most rewarding experience. We will not--we cannot attempt to disclose the extent to which elpie has influenced this 1976 ARCHIVE or the yearbooks of the future here at our dear old alma mater, but we DO know, beyond the depths of all imagination, and the black shadows of doubt that an anonymous mark was burned inexorably into all of us who were fortunate enough to spend many and arduous hours in consultation. And so at the risk of wasting valuable, space, time, and words, with light hearts, and even lighter heads, the staff utters humbly a meager--thanks "pal".

Mr. Russel Smith, a 36 year veteran of teaching here at NL, is certainly a legend in his own time. What would the Science Department and the early students do without him? We'll certainly miss his distinctive voice, knowledge of Lebanon County, and friendly smile around our halls next year. Mr. Smith, the yearbook staff and the Sr. Class says Thank you.

In the third quarter of the Varsity Basketball game against Lebanon Catholic, Cliff Batz scored his 1,000 point, the first Viking ever to do so.

Not only did Batz break the 1,000 mark, he edged Norlebco to a win with a score of 48-45, of which 38 points were made by him.

The ARCHIVE staff would like to offer its warmest and most heartfelt thanks to the most constant and devoted "friend" a yearbook staff could have, elpie. elpie has done more for this 1976 ARCHIVE, its staff, this school, the community, Lebanon County, Pennsylvania, and this great nation of ours, the U.S. of A, than words could begin to convey, therefore we won't use words. No emotion-packed phraseology could possibly reflect the profound impact which has been rendered the ARCHIVE staff this year from our close and most rewarding experience. We will not--we cannot attempt to disclose the extent to which elpie has influenced this 1976 ARCHIVE or the yearbooks of the future here at our dear old alma mater, but we DO know, beyond the depths of all imagination, and the black shadows of doubt that an anonymous mark was burned inexorably into all of us who were fortunate enough to spend many and arduous hours in consultation. And so at the risk of wasting valuable, space, time, and words, with light hearts, and even lighter heads, the staff utters humbly a meager--thanks "pal".

Mr. Russel Smith, a 36 year veteran of teaching here at NL, is certainly a legend in his own time. What would the Science Department and the early students do without him? We'll certainly miss his distinctive voice, knowledge of Lebanon County, and friendly smile around our halls next year. Mr. Smith, the yearbook staff and the Sr. Class says Thank you.
